Poetry.

STRIVE FOR THE MASTERY. Strive for the mastery ! never cave in ; Never give up, no, never; Always remember that those who win Are those who make the endeavor.

Never complain of the want of a friend, Expect not another to aid you, Success must ever on toil depend, And toil will never degrade you.

Work willingly, then, nor let it be said By those who would seek to upbraid you, That a "Streak of good fortune" has come your aid. Or that another has "made you."

Ill that is wanting is latest within, Is dumbering, is dormant within you; Awake from your slumber ! tis time you begin To let the world know what you can do.

Wake up ! all around there is work to be done ! Behald the wreck and the rain! Take hold like a man, for the hour has com That should find you up and doing.

MANUFACTURERS OF RIFLES, Wake up! what's the use to be creeping along Like a snatl in the pathway before you? Go forth like a man that is valiant and strong, That humanity may not ignore you.

> 'Tis a shame that another your burdens should bear. While you are well able to bear them : Twere better that you another's should share, Or at least be willing to share them.

Earn the bread that you sat by the awest of your brow, And see that you cat no other; With a resolute will put your hand to the plow And never look back, no, never,

But on, on in your farrowed pathway sread, And well be that pathway beaten, And be it of all men known and read That you've earned the bread you've eaten

Then when summer and harvest is past and gone,
And age is o'er you creeping,
You'll rejoice that you telled when young and strong, Your life work well completing.
